OVERVIEW

BC First Nations communities have repeatedly and consistently identified the role of the First Nations' Band Managers or Band Administrators (also commonly referred to as Chief Executive Officers or Executive Directors, henceforth in this document referred to as Band Administrators) as being the pivotal position within the political and administrative structure of the First Nation. The role of the Band Administrator is a primary role in communities in hiring, training and deploying First Nation staff and liaising with the elected leadership.

The role of the Band Administrator continues to evolve as First Nations increase their decision-making authority driving the need for knowledge and skills that go beyond the administration of delegated authority over programming. Many First Nations are establishing sophisticated operations to meet the needs of social programming, economic development and other broad powers, all of which are dependent on well trained, high functioning, well supported Band Administrators for success.

The First Nations Public Service Secretariat (FNPSS) is establishing a committee of Band Administrators – the Band Administrators Advisory Committee (“the Committee”) - to guide its work, in recognition of this key role Band Administrators play in their communities and the importance of the advice Band Administrators can provide to the FNPSS.

MANDATE

To advise the FNPSS on work planning, priorities, and activities. As well, to encourage the sharing of knowledge and best practices on common issues and challenges for BC First Nations Band Administrators and staff (making up the BC First Nation Public Service); act as liaisons between the FNPSS and their communities, by sharing information and providing input to the FNPSS; and promote the FNPSS throughout BC First Nation communities.

On an as needed basis, direct and review research and activities in support of the FNPSS, and to represent the FNPSS at meetings, conferences and events, at the request of FNPSS.

MEMBERSHIP

Membership is to be comprised of Band Administrators from 6-10 BC First Nations, and one specially designated Program Manager member. The program managed by this unique member should rotate when a new member is appointed to include in turn as many varied program areas as possible (e.g. Education, Economic Development, Social, Health, Natural Resources, etc). All membership terms will be for 2 years, to be revisited by the committee and the FNPSS at the end of each term, or upon end of employment as Band Administrator. All members must secure and maintain support for their membership from their communities' Chief and Council (and Band Administrator for the Program Manager position) for the duration of their membership term. See list of current members (Annex A).

Other First Nation staff, leadership and community representatives, government officials and/or subject matter experts may be invited to participate and support the Committee. This will occur on an as-required basis.

In-person meetings will be chaired by a BAAC member, with the chair for the subsequent meeting chosen at each meeting. Teleconference or other virtual and/or ad-hoc meetings will be chaired by an FNPSS representative. Meetings and activities will be supported by FNPSS.

MEMBERSHIP CRITERIA

The following criteria will be used by BAAC and FNPSS when considering new members:

- Members should represent the widest possible geographic representation of BC First Nation communities, as well as varied First Nation community sizes (small, medium, large) in addition to other varying demographics (i.e. age, gender)
- Members must currently be a Band Administrator (or equivalent position) for a BC First Nation, with a minimum of 1 years' experience in the role. (N/A for program manager role, although that role should have a minimum of 6 months experience in their program manager role.)
- Be solution oriented and can confidently speak to and provide guidance and input on all aspects of First Nations operations
- It is not a requirement that a member be First Nation themselves, however preference will be given to those that are and meet all other criteria outlined in this section.
